The Indianapolis Office of Sustainability was created to make Indianapolis a leader in sustainability through growing a viable, livable and equitable community. The Office of Sustainability works to further economic development, environmental integrity and social and cultural vibrancy to create a legacy of sustainability in Indianapolis for future generations.

The SustainIndy Community grant program is intended to foster sustainability at the grassroots level. Indianapolis has people with ideas that are ready to get to work on building a more sustainable Indy, but they may not have all the tools they need to get started or may not have the capacity to pursue state or federal funding. This community grant program is designed to help these types of organizations and initiatives in Indianapolis.

Proposals should address the following areas that are important for creating a more sustainable Indianapolis.

1) Sustainability Principles: Proposals should discuss how the three sustainability principles (social, environmental, and economic) are woven into the fabric of the project or program.

2) Public - Private Partnerships: Proposals should identify necessary partnerships to successfully conduct the project or program. Please explain the nature of the partnership(s) i.e. financial, in-kind, and supportive. Partnerships should be mutually reinforcing and beneficial for all parties.

3) STAR Community Rating System: Indianapolis participates in the STAR Community Rating System (STAR), the nation’s first framework and certification program for local sustainability. The Rating System encompasses economic, environmental, and social performance measures for both local governments and the broader community. Click here for more information about STAR’s goal areas and objectives.
