Old Dominion Freight Line, Inc. to Expand its Presence in Indianapolis
Company to make major investment in its regional hub, hire 183 new workers by 2016

INDIANAPOLIS (August 17, 2011) — Mayor Greg Ballard joined executives from Old Dominion Freight Line, Inc. today to announce a major expansion of the company’s regional hub in Indianapolis. Old Dominion will invest nearly $22 million to upgrade and enhance its existing facility at 3915 W. Morris St. and will hire 183 new employees by 2016.

“Old Dominion’s decision to expand its regional hub in Indianapolis is a testament to the fact that our superior location coupled with our quality infrastructure and strong labor pool provides an ideal place for logistics companies to thrive,” said Mayor Ballard.

Founded in 1934 and headquartered in Thomasville, N.C., Old Dominion is a less-than-truckload motor carrier that provides warehousing and distribution services for companies worldwide. Old Dominion operates 213 service centers nationwide and maintains several major regional hubs, including Indianapolis.

The company in recent quarters has seen a dramatic growth in shipments, including a 14 percent increase in the total tonnage moved during the second quarter of 2011. To handle this growth, the company is planning to spend $100 million to $120 million this year to purchase real estate and expand facilities throughout its network.

“Indianapolis is an important location for us, and this expanded facility will help us handle the increased freight volumes we’ve seen from customers,” said David Congdon, Old Dominion’s president and CEO. “As we continue to grow as a company, the expanded Indianapolis service center will play a vital role in how freight moves through the Midwestern region of the country.”

As part of the expansion, Old Dominion will increase the Indianapolis Service Center from 223 doors to 325 doors, making it one of the largest centers in the company’s network.

The company will begin hiring workers at an average wage of more than $20 per hour over the next few months to fill a variety of positions. For a list of available positions, applicants are encouraged to visit www.odfl.com.

Based on Old Dominion’s planned job creation and capital investment, Develop Indy will support personal and real property tax abatement for approval by the Metropolitan Development Commission.
